The dispatch claimed that "oppositionist anti-Socialist forces have become more active in Po-land" after last Saturday's strike, in which Solidarity successfully called an estimated 5 million work-ers off their jobs in a show of force to bring talks on the shortened workweek.

Moscow asserted that Solidarity is using the work-free Saturday is-sue as a pretext to force the gov-erument to release rightist political prisoners from jail and strengthen anti-Socialist groupings.

Dr. Korcak, who also heads the medical team that examined the former hostages, said he did not want to specify either the exact number of the group affected by psychiatric disorders or the specific nature of their conditions. Reagan Budget Chief Proposes Record Cut in U.S. Foreign Aid

By John M. Goshko

hington Post Service WASHINGTON - President Reagan's budget director, David Stockman, has proposed the big-gest cutback of the U.S. foreign aid program since its inception in the aftermath of World War II. It would slice enormous chunks out of every phase of development as-sistance, tie it closely to U.S. polit-ical interests and make it subsidiary to military aid. ment and Budget calls for slashing the $8-billion fiscal 1982 foreign aid proposal submitted to Congress by former President Jimmy Carter by $2.6 billion. A copy of the new proposal has been ob-tained by The Washington Post. Mr. Stockman's plan calls for drastically trimming every facet of nonmilitary aid: direct bilateral assistance to Third World countries, contributions to multilateral development banks, international or-ganizations such as UN agencies, the Food for Peace program and the Peace Corps. If pursued by the Reagan ad-ministration, the Stockman proposals are certain to trigger fierce opposition from foreign aid sup-porters in Congress and the tradidonal U.S. foreign policy establishment, which regards the program as one of the most important tools for influencing events. In particular, some informe sources said Wednesday, it is likely to provide the first test of strength between Socretary of State Alexanhimself with foreign policy moderates, and those on the far right side of the Reagan administration whose first emphasis is on draconian budget cutting and an unabashed "America Fust" approach to foreign affairs.

Mr. Haig's reaction to the Stockman plan is not known. But, the sources noted, if he accepts it in anything resembling its present form, he will be beginning his

China's Leaders Reported To Be Worried by Unrest

In some parts of the country they said authorities have begun to take measures to try to head off further "The authorities fear that they may be facing a second cultural revolution, a term they themselves have used," one source said. The decade-long revolution was one of the most turbulent periods in modern Chinese history, when Mao's widow, Jiang Qing, and nine other defendants in the recent trial shook China with widespread murder and persecution and economic and social chaos.

Factory Strikes Sources said earlier this year that there was a rash of factory strikes and other unrest in China's southern Guangdong province, bordering Hong Kong, but there were no further details. In the country's largest city. Shanghai, several thousand unemployed youths recently marched on the local party headquarters demanding jobs. China this week also announced

A leaflet recently distributed in Peking said several thousand stu-dents in the central Hubei town of Kaifeng also marched through the streets on Jan. 12 after the authoritics refused to take any action in a rape case.

The government media have been full of warnings that the class struggle was continuing. Newspa-pers said that even though Jiang Qing and the nine other defendants had been sentenced, their sup-porters were "still at large"-and trying to undermine the state.

Newspapers in Shanghai and other provinces reported that their areas had been hit by occasional bombings and that and-govern-ment elements had formed secret societies, made weapons and explosives, and encouraged criminals who were participating in everything from drug running to white

Vice-Premier Yao Yilin, 63, wbo goes back nearly as far as Mr. Chen as a top economic adminis-trator, has taken over the state planning commission with orders to make China's long-term planning realistic.

No longer is China's central planning system to produce the visionary plans for a China turning out 60 million tons of steel a year, developing oil fields that rival those of the Middle East, buying the most advanced factories around the world to modernize its industry. Future plans must start with an bonest assessment of China's capacities and the premise that the purpose of economic de-velopment is to improve people's lives, not try to demonstrate the superiority of Socialism by making China an industrial giant.

This is what Mr. Chen, now a Communist Party vice chairman, has wanted to do for nearly 25 years. Starting in the middle 1950s. Mr. Chen argued that Stalinist, Maoist and other leftist economics would only impoverisb China. These economic strategies skipped essential stages of development in what remains a largely rural, agrar-ian economy, he said, and they drained resources that should go to improving living standards.

Compelling Views

Each time Mr. Chen's compelling views won acceptance, he was overruled by Mao. In 1958 Mao scrapped a development plan drafted by Mr. Chen and launched the Great Leap Forward, which was an economic and social disaster. Mr. Chen was put in charge of the recovery.

As Mr. Chen made plans for slow but sustained growth through the 1960s into the 1970s, Mao launched the Cultural Revolution, rejecting Mr. Cben's policies as not true Socialism and purging him along with other "capitalist road-

With the backing of Mr. Deng, Mr. Chen has been trying for the past two years to repair the damage of the Cultural Revolution. He now has the authority for a thorough overhaul of the economy, despite remaining lefust opposition.

bearded sleeper under the table. Describing the curriculum. Maciej Maciejewski, a 23-year-old student at the Institute of Contemporary Culture rubbed his eyes, a gesture that conveyed iong, dreary hours in an overheated classroom.

"In the first year you get 'Political Economics.' It's a vulgar introduction to Leninism and, in fact, to Stalinism. Second year, there's 'Basie Principles of Marxist Philosophy. That's a slightly superior form of indoctrination.

"In the third year, it is Fundamentals of Political Science. The people who do the lecturing are no different from the operatives of the secret police. The fourth year, it's really the tops, 'Philosophy and Sociology of Marxism.' Any student who asks a provocative question

Mr. Maciejewski had the honor of reading out the list of student demands to the deputy minister of science, higher education and technology, who arrived for talks several days ago. Forty-seven in number, the demands cover four singlespaced typewritten pages. When Mr. Maciejewski reached the "political" demands, including the eurriculum changes, the deputy minister "stiffened a bit," he recalled, and the talks broke off.

Sympathetic Populace

The students now are waiting for a higher-ranking delegation, preferahly headed by the minister himself. Janusz Gorski. They say they will continue their sit-in until then. They have ample supplies and even money contributions from a sympathetic populace, many of whom stop by to peer at the latest poster. "We have the grub, we'll sur-vive," says one banner. Lodz, some times called the "Polish Manchester."

One student demand would transform the university senate, a docile body made up of senior professors, into an or-ganization of real authority with equal representation by undergraduates, post-graduate students and faculty. The senate, not the Ministry of Higher Education, would have the final say on the curriculum drawn up by the institutes or faculties. Such a change would greatly diminish governmental control over Poland's 10 universities and 80 other institutions of higher education.

Up to now, the quiescence of students, at a time when the whole country is in the throes of radical upheaval bas surprised outsiders and even Polisb in-tellectuals. There have been brief dem-onstrations at the Catholie University in Lublin and the University of Warsaw aimed at establishing independent stu-dent associations, but by and large students have remained outside the main-

BELFAST — More than 400 IRA prisoners resumed their protest at the Maze Prison Thursday - smearing their cells with excre ment and wearing blankets instead of clothing in a continuing campaign to win political status.

Deal Denied

The British government denies there was any deal but the IRA says authorities agreed privately that prisoners could wear their own clothes most of the time, decorate their cells in lieu of prison work and choose their own education and recreation periods.

The reported pact on political prisoner status was drawn up when seven IRA prisoners — one of them near death — abandoned a 63-day hunger strike in December at the prison complex near Belfast which holds about 2,000 inmates.

"The situation inside the jail is now very tense," Mr. Austin said. "The men are talking about another hunger strike. I'd say a bunger strike is probable more than possi-ble. But it would be the last resort and could be still many weeks

Mr. Austin, who carlier this month was refused permission to visit the United States, said more than 400 men wearing only blan kets were back in their cells which

TEHRAN — Iran showed a film Thursday of interviews made with some of the 52 American hostages the day before their release. Most of those shown said they had generally been treated well, but the two women bostages complained of maltreatment. The apparently unedited filmed interviews with 13 of the 52 hostages were shown to foreign and Iranian journalists in what appeared to be part of an Iranian effort to rebut statements by the hostages that they were mistreated.

Elizabeth Ann Swift, who was a political officer at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, said in a filmed interview that she was "in constant terror that at any moment I was going to be killed." Asked if she had been tortured, she replied: "If being tied to chairs and being blindfolded for long periods of time is physical toriure, then we were toriured." Asked how such testimony could support Iranian claims that the hostages were well treated, Ahmad Azizi, who was director of hostage affairs in the Iranian premier's office, said Ms. Swift was perhaps more sensitive to fear than the male hostages.

Some of the men said in the interviews that they bad not been tortured. "I can only speak for myself," said Steven Lauterbach, an embassy administrative employee. "I personally have not been

The documentary was described as an updated version of an earlier news special on the hostage oegotiations, it portrayed the raid attempt as a desperate move by the Carter administration to rescue the hostages after negotiations for their release had come close to success April 1, but broke down for reasons that are oot entirely clear.

Mr. Carter went oo national televisioo April 1 to announce that important progress was being made to gain the bostages' release. Pierre Salinger, ABC's Paris bu-reau chief, who narrated the docu-

U.S. Foreign Aid

Foreign policy cannons went off all over Washington Wednesday and when the noise had subsided and the smoke had cleared. there were few surprises, a touch of ambiguity and some tough-sounding generalities. From the Office of Management and Budget. though, there was more than a hint of bureaucratic battles to come. Most of the tough talk came from Secretary of State Alexander Haig, who was holding his first news conference in his new job, and Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who was trying to keep his old joh. At the White House, Jamaican Prime Minister Edward Seaga was received as President Reagan's first official guest since taking office and he urged a "foreign policy thrust" into the Caribbean. But the most important "thrust" came from budget director David Stockman. According to a report by Washington Post reporter John Goshko. Mr. Stockman has proposed the biggest cut in U.S. foreign aid since the program began after World War II.

It was interesting to hear from Mr. Haig that the United States had no plans to send military equipment to Iran and that "international terrorism will take the place of human rights in our concern"; and Gen. Jones' warning that a Soviet adventure anywhere in the world could result in U.S. retaliation elsewhere, including, perhaps, the sinking of a Soviet fleet. But neither of those threats has the immediacy of Mr. Stockman's, which is less a warning to the ememies of the United States than to its chief architect of foreign policy, the secretary of state,

In clear, relatively nonbureaucratic language. Mr. Stockman sets foreign policy prioritles, His proposal, titled "Foreign Aid Retrenchment," says that "every major pro-gram should take some reduction" and that "bilateral aid has priority over multilateral aid programs" and that "security assistance has priority over development assistance." Not only is he advocating a 32-percent cut in one of Mr. Haig's most flexible policy tools, but he is ordering the State Department's

It may be, of course, that Mr. Haig agrees with Mr. Stockman's priorities and even the amount of his proposed cutbacks, which would reduce the overall U.S. foreign aid program from $8 hillion a year to $5.47 billion. If he does, that's news, too. A substantially smaller aid program would curb the secretary of state's ability to withdraw aid selectively from countries judged to be acting contrary to U.S. interests. Then, there is the human factor. Does Mr. Stockman bave any idea who would suffer, or perhaps die because of his proposal should it become policy? He surely realizes that even the $8 billion aid program represents less than a third of 1 percent of the $2.6 trillion U.S. gross national product.

He also must understand that sharp U.S. reductions would trigger similar reductions by other countries, which means that multilateral aid organizations such as the International Development Association and regional development hanks would be severely hampered in their operations if not put out of business altogether.

Mr. Haig's remarks on the emphasis to he given human rights in the new administration were somewhat amhiguous. There will he "no de-emphasis," he said, just "a change in priorities," Mr. Stockman's proposals, though, if adopted, would be a sharp, indis-criminate blow to the world's poor and to U.S. policy-making flexibility. President Reagan and Secretary of State Haig should recognize that.

Decontrolling Oil

President Reagan is right to end the price controls on oil immediately, eight months ahead of schedule. The effect of that decision will he to raise the cost of fuel by an additional 5 to 10 cents a gallon. But price increases are a necessary if unpleasant part of the process of adjusting to energy scarcity.

Decontrol alone does not, bowever, constitute an adequate oil policy. It is not likely to protect the economy against temporary shortages like those experienced in 1974 and 1979. Nor will it significantly reduce dependence on foreign oil imports in the long term.

The price controls imposed on domestic oil and refined fuels after the 1973 Arah oil embargo were intended to deny American producers the fruits of the OPEC monopoly. They did offer some price relief, but they also reduced the incentive both to conserve oil and to explore for more. Equally damaging was the tangle of price regulations created hy controls, delaying modernization in the refining industry and providing hillions in unearned, if legal, profits for refiners and retailers who know their way around Washing-

President Carter wisely pronounced the control system a failure last year and ordered it phased out by next September. President Reagan is now on the verge of speeding the pace. The danger is that he will listen to advisers who believe that decontrol and repeal of the "windfall" tax are all that is needed for an energy policy. Unleash industry, they contend, and it will find all the energy America needs.

But a free market alone cannot possibly eliminate dependence on the OPEC nations. Higher oil prices have helped to reduce imports over the last three years, both by cutting demand and increasing exploration. Still higher prices will surely help in the same way. Decontrol will have succeeded even if it did no more than arrest the downward spiral in domestic production. But few analysts believe that America could hecome self-sufficient in liquid fuels at anything like current

At least in theory, freely priced oil could prevent chaos caused hy gasoline shortages, as in the summer of 1979. Once dealers are free to charge even a dollar or two more per gallon in a time of critical shortage, they would ration the available gas far more effectively than did the gasless Sundays and long lines. But it is hard to believe that American motorists would long tolerate such enormous price increases. The public resents the trend of oil company profits. An emergency that increased their profits tenfold would quickly produce demands for more formal rationing or much higher oil taxes.

On decontrol in other words, is no magic bullet. To minimize import dependence, government intervention must supplement market forces. Heavy taxes on gasoline, rehated dollar for dollar to the public, would probahly accomplish the most with the least economic dislocation. No one would get rich at the public's expense. Yet those who needed to use their cars would have adequate access to fuel; those who didn't would have a powerful incentive to conserve.

There are other means to the same end, such as tariffs on oil imports or tougher fuel economy standards for automobiles. But one prerequisite for a dehate on their relative merits is leadership from the top. The sooner Mr. Reagan accepts the reality of energy scarcity the sooner that debate can begin. Polish Unrest

We wish we could rejoice as we contemplate events unfolding in Poland. Ostensibly, the rash of strikes still convulsing Poland is about the length of the working week and also recognition of a farmers' trade union. Yet behind the mundane and materialistic grievances that spark off these diverse stoppages there is the will of a nation to assert its freedom. We respect that. But our overwhelming feeling, as we see Lech Walesa bobbing like a mustachioed figurehead on the latest wave of unrest, is one of sadness.

It can't go on for much longer, can it? Chaos is close to taking over. A four-hour stoppage here, a nine-hour national strike threatened there

A mounting French criticism of President Giseard d'Estaing is that his touch in matters of foreign policy has at least temporarily deserted him. His plan is not novel but its main weakness is that anyone could have proposed it at any time. Economic Plan for Third World

By Jonathan Power

JOLLIET, Belgium — In an age when economic ideas and solutions are two a penny, Robert Triffin bas a record for being original and effective that is the envy of many of his contemporaries. A strange combination of a monetary disciplinarian and a protagnnist of the Third Wurld, be has over the decades influenced a wide range of major institutions. His most recent accomplishment was the designing of the European monetary system.

Now 69 and retired from Yale University, where he was a professor of economics for 30 years, be is back in the country of his birth, Belgium, teaching at the Universi-ty of Louvain.

Seated before the great fireplace piled with roaring logs in the castle of his economist friend Baron Ker-vyn de Lettenhove, be argues, in his quiet passionate way, that the world inflation of the last decade was fed primarily by the U.S. policy of running large balance of pay-ments deficits. They were brought about, be says, by the overseas expenditures incurred by the Vietnam war and by the declining competitiveness of U.S. exports. The United States, be suggests, in effect used its international credit card to flood the world indiscrininately with excess dollars.

Price of Gold

Worse could come. Prof. Triffin continues. Declining confidence in the dollar has led to a sharp rise in the price of gold, most of it held by Westero central banks. Until now. this increase in the value of their gold bas not been used by central banks to justify another great increase in liquidity. But for deficittoro countries there is a grave temptation to do so. The inflationary consequences would be disas-

Prof. Triffin has been pushing the European Economic Community to give what he calls "a spectacular example" and agree that gold profits should not be passed on to their treasuries; they should be put into blocked accounts.

It is a small hop from this to his advocacy of Special Drawing Rights to replace the dollar and gold as the principal means of increasing global liquidity. (The SDR is a line of credit entered in the ledgers of the International Monetary Fund on which members can draw to obtain the foreign currencies they need to settle their payments deficits.1

other reforms, more major in content, have slipped. The Organizawhich have been underutlized since they were introduced in 1968, offer the best bope of controlling inflation. Only in this way can there be disciplined and carefully monitored creation of international liquidity, perhaps limited to a growth rate of 4 to 6 percent a year, (The present rate is around 13 percent.)

Forceful Adrocate

At first sight it is strange that is economic disciplinarian, who on domestic monetary issues often sees eye to eye with Milton Fried-man, should be such a forceful advocate of the needs of the Third World. Yet on monetary reform he is perhaps their single most powerful advocate.

As a young academic, he met Third World issues firsthand. In the 1940s, he helped a number of Latin Americans establish their own central banks and national currencies. Today, he keeps up his old contacts and is courted for his opinion by governments that range from Ahu Dhahi to India. As Prof. Triffin sees it, there are two related problems that the international financial community must soon address. First, there is the growing balance of payments deficits of the Third World. brought on, not principally by economic mismanagement but by the rising price of oil and by the West's recession. Second, is the grossly imbalanced way liquidity is divided between the rich and the poor. Over the last 10 years the industrialized enuntries have received 97 percent of the new liquidity, the developing countries a paltry 3 percent.

The distribution of what few SDRs there are, which should in theory counterbalance this hias, is also skewed - 70 percent for the rich and 30 percent for the poor.

The world will only move forward out of its economic crisis, he says, if the SDR takes over from the dollar and is doled out more equitably.

European SDR

At the moment, there are a few signs of progress. The members of the European monetary system have given their national currencies a demotion by deciding to he-gin to borrow in ECU, a kind of European SDR. The IMF is attempting to make the SDR more attractive by using a simplified basket of five currencies instead of 16 for determining its price. Set against these small steps,

T ONDON — "Things fall apart; the centre cannot bold." wrote Yeats. "Mere anarchy is loosed upon the world." It could as well be the cry of the British Labor Party's social democrats, who have just seen their party tak-

The event is striking because it is the reverse of what has happened elsewhere in Western Europe, where centrists mostly domi-nate not only Socialist but conservative movements — and thus win elections. There is good reason to doubt that the new left-controlled Labor Party can win another election in Britain.
The defeated Labor right has formed a "Council for Social Democracy" and dreams of alliance with the small Liberal Party and with Tories hostile to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. These are merely dreams. A moderate apposition in the existing Conservative government will eventually reform, but it will take time. For the present, Britain is without a responsible opposition. The Labor Party bas effectively abdicated that role.

Union Power

The abdication has been coming for a long time, but the crucial step, taken at a party conference Saturday, made Labor's leader — and thus its candidate for the prime ministership — elected by party congress, with the trade unions assigned predominant pow-er. Mr. Hammarskield said that the United States should move swiftly to modernize airport customs and immigrations facilities and policies because attractive currency exchange rates have transformed the United States into a prime tourist destination.

"All of a sudden a German, a Dutchman, even a Frenchman or a Swiss can buy more in this country than he can on his own continent," he said. "There are more Europeans flying west than Americans flying east across the Atlantic."

Delays of an hour or more for incoming international travelers are common at U.S. airports because of present customs and immigration practices that "require each and every passenger to be questioned, creating a needless waste of inspection manpower to the detriment of the U.S. taxpayer and the traveler," according to a recent IATA task force report.

Mr. Hammarskiold said that an Mr. Hammarskjold said that an alternative inspection system recommended by the Geneva-based IATA would establish separate "red and green channels" for arriving passengers. "People who have something to declare would go through the red channel and those who don't would go through the green," he explained. "Observers would be posted in the green to pick out those suspected of concessing something they didn't pick out those suspected of concealing something they didn't declare."

U.S. airport inspection procedures are more cumbersome than those of many other nations, Mr. Hammarskjold said, because "unil now the direction of tourists has been mainly outgoing. What is needed is a complete rethinking of attitudes to adapt to the needs of a tourist-receiving country."

IATA's member airlines, which represent 85 countries and account for 72 percent of passenger traffic outside of the Soviet Union, suffered their largest collective loss in history last year, while members' fuel bills jumped to a total of $9 billion from $5 billion in 1979. Mr. Hammarskjold predicted that the airlines would do better this year.

U.K. Nationality Bill Assailed as Racist Ploy

LONDON - Amid heated arguments, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative govern-ment introduced a British nationality bill that critics elaimed was a ploy to keep out nonwhite immigrants.

"This is an immigration control bill dressed up to look like a na-tionality bill and will have a deeply adverse affect on race relations, said Roy Hattersley, opposition Labor Party spokesman on home

The bill creates three categories of citizenship and opponents said it would mean some 6 million people, including 4.7 million in the colony of Hong Kong, would have no right to live or settle in Britain.

As the second-reading debate began in the House of Commons Wednesday, Home Secretary Wil-liam Whitelaw denied the bill was aimed at nonwhites,

"Where People Belong"

"We are doing nothing new in suggesting our citizenship should give a better idea of where people actually belong," he said.

The bill provides that only British citizens, people born in Britain of parents "normally resident," or born abroad but with a British par-cut or grandparent, have the right of residence.

The other proposed categories, with no automatic right of residence, are citizens of British dependent territories - the remaining colonies — and British over seas citizens.

The last group covers primarily an estimated 1.5-million people, mainly Chinese and Asian minorities, who chose British citizenship when Britain granted independence to its East African colonies and Malavasia.

The bill incorporates much of the complex legislation passed since the end of World War II, when Britain began withdrawing

LONDON - People living in the European Economic Commu-

The Intelligence Unit of The Economist magazine said that the current recession will keep leisure spending at a standstill in the early 1980s but as living standards and earnings increase, spending should rise to about $550 billion by 1990 from $437 billion last

People io the EEC now have about 49 hours a week for leisure but this is likely to grow by about two hours by 1990. Leisure

In a land whose people mark human existence in never-ending four-billion-year cycles, and the demands of agrarian life require only the barest of routine, there is little incentive to value time materially, and consequently little incentive to measure it.

While the English language can divide time into microseconds and milliseconds. India's predominant Hindi language employs the same word. kal, for both tomorrow and vesterday. The words for minute and second in most of the coun-try's 15 official languages are ei-ther nonexistent or are adaptations from English. For example, in the Punjab of North India, the words are mint and scint.

The lack of such linguistic precision is understandable. Much of tudian life, even in large cides, reflects a lack of awareness that time

Time Sense of an Infant

New Delhi psychologist Sudhir Kakar, who has worked in Europe and the United States, equates the undeveloped Hindu sense of time with that of an infant. "He lives without memories of what has gone before or expectation of what lies ahead, and time is thus motionless," be explained, Mr. Kakar noted that there is less of the driving, coercive quality to time for the Hindu than for a Westerner.

Lokish Chandra, a respected authority on Indian culture and member of Parliament, summed up: "I'm going to be reincarnated thousands of times. If I don't get something done in this life, I have other opportunities."

Indians often find it difficult to absorb the higher Western value on time, A taxi driver, for example, expresses genuine puzzlement when a passenger is angered at a 10-minute stop for gasoline.

India's bloated, lethargic government bureaucracy survives in part because there is oo correlatioo between time and money. A Western resident of the Indian capital, who recently spent eight bours at a local post office picking up a package from home, inquired about the origin of the system that required such a lengthy procedure merely to obtain delivery of a small package.

Residents in Goa recently expressed concern to a foreign visitor that a river bridge under construc-tion on the main road linking the territory's airport with its capital would damage the quality of life by trimming the long wait for a ferry to a car ride of only a minute.

With little appreciation for time duration, estimates of events both past and future tend to be vague and uncenain, even when expressed in exact language. When a government clerk says his superior will return in two minutes, it means most likely within half an

Women's groups have often called on Thai newspapers oot to publish nude or sexy pictures which they say degrade Thai womanhood. For the Hindu, time's value is strictly spiritual. For upper-caste Hindus, precision is required for calculation of horoscopes and from them the determination of auspicious or inauspicious periods. Indeed, complicated Hindu boroscopes are meticulous about the exact time of birth. "One pal [approximately 20 seconds difference in time of birth can mean significant differences io the astrological chart," Mr. Chandra said.

But words such as pal are rarely. ever, applied to the passage of time in the temporal sense. Such measurement is deemed unnecessarily precise. Many Indians of lower Hindu castes know neither their birthdays nor their ages.

This lack of precision can also make judicial proceedings ex-tremely difficult. Mr. Singh, who practiced law before his journalis-uc career, recalled a case that hinged on a peasant's ability to confirm with some exactness when a specific event occurred. "I went crazy trying to pinpoint the time, but he had no idea what I was talking about" Mr. Singh recalled. While India's continued industrialization has brought increasinglarge numbers of its population nder some form of time discipline during the past three decades, there are few signs of any funda-mental change in the value a Hindu gives to time.

"Time is too auspicious to give it material value," Mr. Chandra said.
"To do so would depreciate it."

After her first year at Northwestern, she knew she wanted to be an actress. Her father advised her to drop out of school and ry the theater. Her mother thought she should get a degree, and, when she did drop out, informed Lucy that if she was old enough to make such big decisions the true and account to the state of the stat she was old enough to support herself and bve on her own.

She moved into an apartment in New York with a roommate, en-rolled at the Neighborhood Playhouse and got a job as Matthan's dresser on Broadway in "The Odd Comple" (he was her stepfather by then). She started getting work doing voice-overs for commercials, a lucrative trade for actors.

She got parts in "Blue Collar," playing Harvey Keitel's wife, and "Greased Lightning," in which she played "white trash." Her role in "Hopscotch," though it was cut from four scenes to one, was a welcome relief from the "perky, bubbly" parts she usually is called for, she said.

"I convinced him to walk a few blocks to the theater so I could prove to him that I really was in this play and he shouldn't put me in jail. It worked."

Writer's Dilemma

Although she is the daughter and sister of writers, she has no intention of engaging in that craft for a while. For one thing, she has oot resolved the basic dilemma of a writer: How to write about what you know, and do it honestly, without hurring those closest to

She's had first-hand experience of that kind of pain. Her father wrote about her (she wouldn't say in which book) and it hurt her deeply. "He went on all these TV shows and apologized for it, but I just didn't want to talk about it with him. It wasn't accurate. My brother had been through this several times, and he called me before the book came out and said. Watch ont."

Saroyan has since written an article about her "The Father of the Most Beautiful Girl in the World," which she loved, but the earlier hart lives on.

"The only reason to be a writer is if you can't not do it," she said "I don't feel that. But I do feel that way about acting. If you don't feel that way about acting, then don't do it. Live a real life."

Except for David Blair, who died five years ago and is still much missed, the baller's first east had a reunion with their successors and with Ashton on the stage after the anniversary performance. Na-dia Nerina came from retirement to see Lesley Collier as another scintillating embodiment of Lise, the beguiling farmer's daughter who outwits her mother's ambitious plans and wins a husband of her own choice.

. The corps de ballet has another major comiribution to make, and today's dancers certainly have a stronger technique to their credit. Whether video recording is best done at a live performance I am not so sure. It depends whether spontaneity is preferable to precision. There were flaws in the Royal Ballet's video performance which went uncorrected, since no relakes were made (one background dancer bumping into another, for instance) and I would find this as much of a future irritation as wrong notes on a phonograph record. The dramaturgy is ingenious in plan, synchronized to the seasons of life: for boyish glee a farce, for young manhood a romantic comedy-ballet, for gloom of decline the bitter irony of "Tartuffe."

For the role of Louis XIV Bejart has selected a young dancer-actor, Thierry Redler, who is neither a member of his ballet company nor of the Comedie. At 22 Redler has had, however, wide theatrical experience that has developed his versatility. On television he has played in the costume dance "Cinq Mars" and danced the Debussy-D'Annunzio "Le Martyre de St. Sebastien." New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The much criticized home ownership component of the Consumer Price Index will be deleted and probably will be replaced with an esti-mate fur rents, said Jacet Norwood, the commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Reuters reported that Mrs. Norwood had denied Thursday that her agency had decided to change the index by dropping the home ownership component. "We are publishing several experimental measures of home ownership, including one on rental equivalence," she said.

["I find a rental equivalence approach conceptually appealing, but there are empirical issues to be worked out before a decision cao be made. We also must consider other possible approaches to measurement of home ownership."]

The most probable effect of such a change, which is eduled to occur in 1985, would be to slow the rate of increase in the overall index, according to Patrick Jackman, the official in charge of assembling the CPI each month. That could mean smaller pay increases in those federal benefits — such as Social Security — and government pensions that are tied by law to the

A criticism that has won widespread acceptance is that the current method of compiliog the index includes the cost of buying and financing a house even though very few consumers make such purchase to any month. In a period of rapidly rising real estate prices and home purchase costs exaggerates the rise of the overall price level. can interest rates, it is said, the inclusion of home-

Currently, the home ownership component in the CPI accounts for about 23 percent of the entire index. In 1980 the index for all urban people rose 14.3 percent; using a housing component based on rents rather than home ownership would have produced a CPI of 11.6 percent.

No Objections Sighted

Mrs. Norwood said she recently had a discussion of the subject with Murray Weidenbaum, the chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers.

"From what I can piece together, I don't see any disagreement from anyone," Mrs. Norwood said.

However, there has been emphatic opposition to the use of rent estimates in the CPI has come from the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. Its research director, Rudolph Oswald, said Wednesday that the present index should be retained. Saying that two-thirds of the American population lives in owner-occupied houses, because it is essentially "an investment item, not a Mr. Oswald said "arbitrarily trying to use a statistic that is not based oo how people actually spend their money is inappropriate and wrong."

A career employee of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Mrs. Norwood's four-year term as commissioner ends in May, 1983. By 1984, she said, the bureau will have completed a new survey of consumer spending patterns, data that will be used to revise the makeup of the CPI in 1985.

As part of that review, the bureau may drop home ownership and replace it with "rental equivalency." That is, the bureau would estimate how much home owners would have to pay if they were renting their houses. Such a figure is likely to go up less rapidly than the cost of buying a house — that is, the house price plus the mortgage interest rate — Mr. Jackman

According to Mr. Jackman, the bureau was pre-pared to make such a change in the index in the middle 1970s when it was preparing the revisions that took effect in 1978. He noted, however, that one of President Carter's economic advisers, Lyle Gramley, opposed such a change, as did arganized labor. John ayng, an assistant commissioner of labor statistics, said there was also insufficient support from advisers to former President Ford.

Mr. Gramley, now a member of the Federal Reserve Board, said the administration's subcommittee on economic statistics "was unanimous" in the view that such a change was "the wave of the future" should oot be approved at that time. He recalled that

Home Ownership May Be Evicted From U.S. Consumer Index Julius Shiskin, the former commissioner now de-ceased, was unwilling to change the CPI "unless peo-ple were strongly pushing him in that direction."

The decision not to drop house purchase costs is of historical significance because soaring home prices and interest rates on new mortgage loans have been rising faster than the test of the index, and have been pulling it up during much of the last two years. By the same token, the rapid drop in mortgage interest rates and was chiefly responsible for the fact that the index registered no increase last July.

"If the same subcommittee met today," Mr. Gramley said. "I doubt we would come to the same conclu-

Variation: CPI-X1

In his final budget, former President Carter recom mended that Congress discontinue using the CPl as the standard for raising Social Security benefits, pen-sions to retired civil servants and military personnel, and some other benefits, Instead, Mr. Carter proposed the use of an experimental variant of the index, called CPI-X1, that sustitutes rental equivalency for home ownership costs.

However, that would require an aet of Congress and a legislative tussle that the Reagan administra tion probably would want to avoid. Revising the CPI itself could be done by administrative action. Such a change nnt only might retard the rise in federal bene-fits but might also have a similar effect on pay rises for some 7 million to 10 million workers whose wages are tied by collective bargaining contracts to the in-

agan Advisers Predict 5% Inflation Rate

By Kenneth H. Bacon A.P. Dow Jones

IINGTON - President Reagan's ecolvisers are projecting that the adminis-planned package of tax-rate and fediding reductions could lower the annunflation rate to 5 percent and sharply mounic growth by 1984.

ically, Mr. Reagan's economists are im that by 1984 the "real" gross naroduct, or total output of goods and adjusted for inflation, could be grow-a sunual rate of between 4 and 5 pereal GNP fell 0.1 percent last year; the administration projected it would rise ent this calendar year and 3.7 percent

This would be the lowest 72, when Richard Nixon's wage-price program held inflation to 3.3 percent, sould be sharply lower than last year's reent increase in consumer prices.

administration's preliminary projec-e considerably more optimistic than if many private economists. The forerepend on winning congressional apich will likely face stiff political opposi-

in three weeks, the new administration plans to announce an economic program that calls for a 30-percent cut in personal tax rates over three years; a 40-percent acceleration in depreciation write-oils for business investment; strong measures to slow the growth of federal spending, and efforts to reduce the costs of federal regulations. The Reagan plan also assumes a tight monetary policy by the Federal Reserve Board to belp curb inflation.

Several prominent private ecocomists — in testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee Wednesday — expressed reservations about the Reagan plans.

"A tug of war between high personal tax cuts and ever-tighter money would be unremitting bad news for the U.S. economy," because it would boost interest rates and inflation, said Walter Heller, the chairman of President Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers.

Convincing Arguments

Otto Eckstein, president of Data Resources Inc., a major economic forecasting concern, testified that the Reagan proposals would be "gambling with our economy on the bet" that the growth generated by tax cuts would be enough to offset the federal revenue-reducing effect of lower taxes.

Michael Evans, president of Evans Economics and a supporter of the Reagan tax plans, said the company's forecasts show that an 8-percent inflation rate is possible by 1984. Although this would be a considerable improvement from the current rate, it is less optimistic than the 5-percent inflation rate that Mr.

The witnesses did not respond directly to the Reagan forecast because it did not come up for discussion at the hearing. Alan Greenspan, president of Townsend-Greenspan and an architect of the Reagan plan, told the com-mittee that the administration believes interest rates and inflation would both "show a dramatic reduction" if tax rates and government spending can be lowered.

The success of the package depends in part on coovinging financial markets and the public in general that it will work.

Officials say that if financial markets believe the administration can slow the growth of federal spending while cutting tax rates to spur the economy, interest rates will fall. Also, pres-sure to increase wages and prices will moder-ate and inflation will slow.

Any decline in interest rates and inflation will produce immediate cost savings to the government. The interest cost of servicing the national debt would decline, and Social Security, federal retirement and other benefits that rise automatically with inflation would grow at a slower rate.

The administration's Economic Planning Council, led by Trensury Secretary Donald Regan, is meeting almost daily to set up a system of tax and budget-cutting measures. They are likely to include tighter eligibility standards for unemployment benefits, food stamps, federal disability payments and student loans to slow future spending on the programs, as well as reductions in planned nonmilitary procurement and construction programs, such as highment and construction programs, such as highways and mass transit.

He continues to recommend McDermott because the marine construction cycle is just begin-ning. He also recommends Sedeo and Dresser for long-term accounts. Among his previous recommendations, he has placed hold ratings on Halliburton, Western of North America and Reading & Bates, He views Schlumberger and Baker International as "strong

She acknowledges coocern about overcapacity in some segments of the industry. This has influenced her stocks selection. It includes Halliburton and McDermott, which she expects to benefit from an upturn in marine construction. Her other choices are NL Industries, Newpark Re-

Most of the respondents expect 4,000 rigs to be working in the United States in 1985 — up from about 3,000 now — but there was little increase from the 1985 forecast in the 1990 expectation, he says. "The fact that drilling rigs, seismic crews and personnel may be down in 1990 indicates to us that the energy crisis will be over in the late 1980s," he says.

Lewis to Form Auto Industry Task Force

By Ernest Holsendolph New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said that he would form and head a remment task force to help ailing auto industry, but he pledged to support certain safety standards such as the air bag requirement and restrictions on hazardous emissions.

Mr. Lewis, whose department includes the government's auto safety agency, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, said Wednesday in a prepared statement. "Among other things, we will consider where federal regulations can be eased without sao-dicing the pressure safety and rificing the oecessary safety emission standards,"

Also Wednesday, representa-tives of the nation's three largest auto manufacturers told a Senate panel that the "the industry oceds a moratorium on further regulations," not all regulations.

Mr. Lewis' announcement was in line with what he told a Senate confirmation hearing several weeks ago, namely that he wanted to occupy a position similar to that of his predecessor, Neil Goldschmidt, who took charge of the interagency work on the auto industry.

The Force

He said he would go to Detroit ext week to confer with both auto industry managers and labor leaders to gain some background for the work of his task force, which will include Treasury Secretary Donald Regan; Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige; the yet-un-confirmed Labor Secretary; Bill ic or "passive" seat restraints for crash protection, such as air bags.

Symphony for 6 cylinders in V.

The work opens with a gentle pianissimo murmur, as the 6 cylinders begin the prelude to a drive in a Renault 30TX. The first movement softly introduces us to the full range of instruments, which suggest quiet harmony and give promise of excitement to come.

As the Renault 30TX moves into a peaceful adagio, the 6 cylinders establish the theme in V, which is played with quiet legato. A pastoral interlude follows, in which long poetic passages are interspersed by bursts of allegro, interpreted with brio by the 6 cylinders.

But now comes a prolonged period of open road, giving the 6 cylinders full scope to demonstrate their agility and staying power.

The extraordinary verve of the work is revealed in this sustained prestissimo, in which the sound paradoxically stays continuously below mezzoforte level.

For the real connoisseur, this is the movement that best demonstrates the brilliant genius of this symphony for 6 cylinders in V by Renault 30TX.

The golfing nightmare that the 19th hole will become an oil well and Arnold Palmer will have to dodge the roughnecks on his way up the 12th

The news brought consternation to the occupants of the deep leather chairs in the clubhouse. SISTER WOLF

By Ann Arensberg, Knopf. 209 pp. $9.95.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

A NN ARENSBERG'S first novel, "Sister Wolf," is a book I overlooked when it was published last fall. In the meanime it seems to have acquired a reputation, because disinterested admirers keep mentioning it where admirers keep mentioning it wher-ever I turn. And after reading it, I can understand their enthusiasm. Highly original, extravagantly romantic, intensely imagined, it's a story - almost a grim fairy tale, really - that leaves a deep impression on one's memory.

Marit Deym is the only daughter of an aristocratic couple who emigrated from Hungary at the start of World War II and, for the sake of the husband's health, retired to a 1,000-acre estate in the Berkshires. Now that her parents are dead, Marit lives there alone, and, because she is something of an ecological crusader and in any case prefers animals to people — "When animals bared their fangs, they were enraged; in humans a show of teeth was called a smile"

— she bas decided to establish a wildlife sanctuary oo her property. As the novel begins, she is await-ing delivery of five wolves from the local zoo.

Unfortunately for Marit, though happily for her story, she is not quite content to "turn and live with animals." Though she is arrogant, imperious and, "as a social being," "incompetent," she does bave a close friend in Lola Breward a charp-witted society helle vard, a sharp-witted society belle who works as an assistant to a local matron. And she is about to meet and fall in love with Gahriel Frankman, a counselor at the camp for the blind that adjoins Marit's property, thanks to Marit's pack of wolves, who will surround him and force him into their mistress' presence one night.

None of Arensberg's characters do things by halves, Lola Brevard's real purpose in life is to scout young women to he her lovers, and she expounds for Marit on the beauty of lesbian love with "a look on her face like Magellan rounding Patagonia." Gabriel Frankman is atoning for the responsibility he feels for having caused the acci-dental death of his fiancee, a wom-an so pathologically skittish that when Gabriel once spoke sharply to her over some minor household matter, she raced out of their apartment in Greenwich Village and into the path of a speeding tow truck

And Marit, who loves animals with a love untrammeled by suspi-cion, the kind of love that does oot seek its own advantage, "or oegoti-ate for favorable terms" - Marit fails prey to a degree of jealousy that causes her to lose control of herself — she literally attacks the grave of Gabriel's dead fiancee — and leads to the novel's tragic and somewhat grisly denouement.

If "Sister Wolf" has a major flaw, it is that oone of its action has much psychological truth, despite the pains Arensberg has tak-en to achieve psychological real-ism. For example, she takes the trouble to paint in the background of Marit's mental instability. which takes the form of an overvivid imagination during moments of stress. Marit's mother, Luha, used to entertain her with bedtime stories about being buried alive. Once she made the mistake of casting Marit as the victim of an epi-sode, which traumatized her permanently. But none of this really has much to do with Marit's pathological jealousy.

Yet despite the lack of psychomacabre in fleeting references to bats, vampires and were creatures, the stock-in-trade of the Deym family's Carpathian Mouotain background. Part of it is Arens-berg's ability to keep the reader c balance.

But mostly it's the extravagance of her writing that keeps us in-volved. Here is Marit succumbing the "shrinking-potioo"

jealousy:
"Marit was an apprentice to the effects of jealousy, but she knew without experience to teach her, that a jealous person must grind her teeth and wear a mask Jealousy is an affliction to be hidden, repressed, covered up, and lied about, like a mysterious ulcerated sore that could be the be-ginning of leprosy. Otherwise the lover will shrink away, gathering his robes around him for fear of contamination, and withdraw from the afflicted person, for whom there is oo cure except lifetime quarantine.

"Marit felt evil and lowered, n duced to the status of a rabid gnome. Her gender was threatened; any moment she might stant hopping and spitting. Or tear the telephooe out of the wall, sioce it refused to ring. She had never wanted for calls or letters from one-down, in Dutch, or on their hook, Gabriel's disfavor was hive. boils, splinters, and fleabite; there was no salve for such a rash, ex-

BRIDGE

EARLY in this century it was standard practice for authors of newspaper columns about whist or hridge to include a problem.
The reader was shown, perhaps, a six-card ending and invited to work out how South could make five tricks with hearts as trump as-suming hest play by hoth sides. These double-dummy problems have fallen out of favor because they are divorced from the realities of the game and are overly com-plex for most tastes. More practical, but less appropriate for use in a newspaper which is accustomed to showing 52 cards, is the singledummy problem: What is the best line of play looking at declarer's hand and the dummy.

A new form of problem devised by Jean Besse is called DSD or double-single-dummy problems. The reader is invited to study the complete deal shown and consider the play in four spades after the defense has led three rounds of hearts. South plays correctly (hut not double-dummy) and is defeated. How does this come about?

Superficially it seems that North-South judged well in choosing to play game in their four-three spade fit. Five diamonds would be exactly a 50 percent chance, depending on the spade king. Three no-trump would be worse, needing a 4.4 heart spile or spile or welling. no-trump would be worse, needing a 4-4 heart split or an unlikely block as well as a spade finesse. And South can bring home four spades if West has the king of trumps with one, two or three small cards, or if East has K-x-x. This adds up to 60 percent This adds up to 60 percent.

Suppose, for example, that West has K-x of spades, which quickly disappears in two rounds with the aid of a finesse. South can then play diamond winners and is in control when East chooses to ruff. However, with the actual distri-bution the defense can lay a trap for South, and Besse shows bow. When South takes a trump finesse at the fourth trick. East ducks. And when the finesse is repeated he ducks again, a most unusual

Ewing may not he as tall as Ralph Sampson, or as quick and tierce around the basket as Malone but, all in all, he has qualities that make coaches drool. Above all, his temperament shows in every pesture on the court. He is intense, self-motivated and obviously driven by far higher standards than the modest necessity that he dominate high school

On defense, he looks like a wide-roaming bockey goalie who wants a shutout. He is that rare player who obviously considers defense — total, mumidating control of the defensive backboard and the quick, long outlet pass — to be his primary duty. He considers all five offensive players as "his," yet is so agile that he seldom fouls, certainly not the clumsy kind usually associated with youngsters

"The first thing that opened my eyes," Thomp-son said, "was when I saw him fire an outlet pass, then get down and stuff in a quick miss at the other end. The other great big men wouldn't have gotten to mideourt by then.

"He does everything well, but his trademark may be that no big man has enjoyed running or been able to run so well and so much. The key to beating a Chamberlain or Jabbar is to he where

On offense. Ewing can do the flashy things—fancy dribbling, shoot the soft jumper, spin for finger rolls. Unlike many big men, he knows he's 7 feet and is determined to use every bit of his crushing natural advantage.

His offensive game is like a practice session for some higher league. He demonstrates early, to please the crowd, that he can do the cute stuff. Then he heads for the hole and spends the rest of the night polishing thankless skills - fighting for position, spinning from one post to the other, timing his break for the lob pass, trying to get or at least keep alive every offensive rebound. Time and again, Ewing practices moves that have no relation to the players around him. Above the rim, he will begin a quick move —a hook slam dunk, a backward over-the-head jam - and suddenly realize that it's not a sure thing.

Where others might be tangled, Ewing simply changes plans, returns to earth, then goes up with a more suitable move. "He measures the rim," Thompson said. "Always knows where it is."

Ewing is both greedy and unselfish. He's greedy in that even when his team is far ahead he bears down more than others, gobbling rebounds, being a part of every fast break. But after Tuesday's game, he said: "I wasn't particularly intense to-night. I just enjoy the game. The coach takes me out and rests me so much that I can't wait to get back in. I just hate to miss the fun."

Near-Phobia

If that means racing the length of the floor on the off chance of being the trailer on the break, Ewing makes the dash with pleasure — not punshment - written on his face.

But Ewing is selfless in that he has a near-phohis about being singled out as being better than his teammates. He always tries to pass before he shoots and takes more satisfaction in his mates' showtime" than his own.

Such freshness, which Thompson calls inno-cence, probably should be credited to Jarvis. This has been the most unusual recruiting of any player of this magnitude in history," Thompson said. "If wouldn't have had a chance.

Gillman was asked to detail his impact on the club and on Jaworski. "Oh, my, I can't talk about that. That would be too embarrassing. I just couldn't say anything."

Unsurprising

That Gillman punched up the offense and belped Vermeil in transforming Jaworski from an awkward into an outstanding quarterback is not entirely surprising, given Gillman's varied background. He was widely analysis over to Burn Phillips.

Gillman kept trying to get out of the game. But he returned to the pros in 1977 as offensive coordinator for the Chicago Burn Phillips. ground. He was widely regarded as one of the most creative men ever to wear a coach's whistle. Certainly since graduating from Ohio ly '30s, he's been among the most successful.

Gillman spent 20 seasons as an assistant at OSU, Denison, Miami (Ohio) and West Point, and then as head coach at Miami and Cincinnati. He never won fewer than eight games in a season. what a tirili, Kon, to be able to address you after all these years as "President Reagan." Your old friends here in California know you can do it, fellow, and are rooting for you. Stay laid back and don't forget your old pals. As ever.

Dear Mr. Presi-

deni: flattered that the president himself took the time to write to his old buddy. but you've got to be kidding, pal. You mean in Washington they've Baker got no oranges growing on the trees over the swimming pool?

Yours.

Dear Ronnie:

All right, I can believe it about no oranges, but you've got to swim inside? Inside the house? And what is this story about turning to ice if you walked out onto the patio and dived into the pool? Does that mean you can't have a luau outdoors?

Incredulously yours.

Dear Ron: We are all saddened by your letter and promise not to be shocked next time we sec you, you have lost your tan. The same thing happened once to a body-shop guy who used to do my fenders down at Anaheim after he spent six weeks in the hospital, and everybody was very sensitive toward him and never let on to him that he looked funny. Later his tan came back just as good as new. Your pal,

Dear Paleface:

Your letter about January and February was so fascinating. I dug out my old notebooks from the days at USC and sure enough, there it was. I knew I'd heard about January and February someplace, but it was way back in my sophomore year.

Dear Mr. President: Of course I understand about your not wanting to be addressed as "Dear Paleface" on account of historians someday rifling through your letters, and I don't think for a

NEW YORK — Dear President Reagan:
What a thrill, Ron, to be able to

Caught your press conference on the tube, and you were terrific. That new thing you do — sort of twitching your nose — is inspired. Apologetically

Dear Mr. President: I didn't mean to be a wise guy about the new twitching-the-nose business. Believe me, old buddy. I'm truly sorry you've had a bad case of the sniffles. Ron. What is the sniffles and how do you get it? Sympatherically,

Dear Ronnie: Your letter about the sniffles really blew my mind. Particularly the part about your feet being cold all the time, especially after standing outside in the slush for 20 minutes talking to senators. What is slush, Ronnie, and why do they put it around your feet when you go outside 10 talk 10 senators? l am going to talk to a yogi who may have some tips about how to warm up those feet.

Worriedly. The guy who told you to keep your feet next to an electric beater may not be your friend. Think about it — your feet are going to get a beautiful tan, and the media wiseaeres will joke about a twotoned president.

Ron, I talked to the yogi, and he says the best thing is to sit on the floor for six hours every day and then bring your bare feet up, one at a time, as close to your mouth as you can get them, and blow warm air on them. He is willing to come out East and demonstrate bow to do it, as he could use the publicity of a little time on the TV news teaching the president how to put his foot in his mouth.

Helpfully,

Dear President Reagan:
I am sorry the Secret Service had to intercept the swami at Dulles Airport, but at least they discovered he was an illegal immi-grant and got him out of the coun-try. The gall of these foreigners! Well, at least I helped you catch one. I'm sorry you're so upset, Mr. President, I'll make it up to you believe me. For instance, there's a guy up in Venice just came up with fantastic new tanning

Uses of Clutter and Collecting

From Old Newspapers to Memorabilia to Antiques

By Ada Louise Huxtable

New York Timer Service

NEW YORK — There are two kinds of people in the world — those who bave a horror of a vacuum and those with a horror of the things that fill it. Translated into domestic interiors, this means people who live with, and without, clutter, (Dictionary definition: jumble, confusion, disorder.)
The reasons for clutter and the need to be surrounded by things go deep, from security to status. The reasons for banning objects, or living in as selective and austere an environment as possible, range from the aesthetic to

Some people elutter compulsively, and others just as compulsively throw things away. Clutter in its highest and most organized form is called collecting. Collecting can be done like the Collyer brothers, or it can be done with art and flair. The range is from old newspapers to Faberge.

This provides a third category, or what might be called calculated clutter, in which the objets d'art, the memorabilia of one's milestones and travels, the ornamental things that speak to pride, pleasure and temptation, are constrained by decorating devices and hierarchial principles of value. This gives the illusion that one is in control.

Most of us are not in control. My own life is an unending battle against clutter. By that I do not mean to suggest that I am dedicated to any clean-sweep asceticism or arrange-ments of high art; I am only struggling to keep from drowning in the detritus of every-

Really living without clutter takes an iron will, plus a certain stoicism about the little comforts of life. I have neither. But my eye requires a modest amount of beauty and secenity that elutter destroys. This involves eternal watchfulness and that oldest and most relentless of the housewife's occupations: picking up. I have a feeling that picking up will go on long after ways have been found to circumvent death and taxes.

Disorder Descends

I once saw a home in which nothing had ever been picked up. Daily vigilance had been abandoned. Although disorder descends on the unwary with the speed of light, this chaos must bave taken years to achieve.

The result was not, as one might suppose, the idiosyncratic disorder of a George Price drawing, where things are bung from pipes and books in permanent arrangements of awesome convenience.

This was an expensive, thoughtful, architect-designed house where everything had simply been left where it landed. Pots and pans, linens and clothing, toys and utensils were tangled and piled everywhere. No bare spot remained on furniture or floor. And no one who lived there found it at all strange, or seemed to require any other kind of domestic landscape. They had no hangups, in any sense of the word.

I know another bouse that is just as full of things, but the difference is instructive. This is a rambling old bouse lived in for many years by a distinguished scholar and his wife, whose love of the life of the mind and its better products has been equaled only by their love of life. In this very personal and knowledgable eclecticism, every shared in tellectual and cul-tural experience led to the accumulation of discoveries, mementos and objects of virtu, kept casually at band or in unstudied places. Tabletops and floors were thickets of books and overflow treasures. A child could be told the story of Rome from scenes on bandsome dinner plates that had a story of their own. There was enormous, overwhelming, profligate clutter. And everything had meaning, memory and style. At the opposite extreme is the stripped, inof us reson to more conventional forms of clutter combat. Houses have, or had, attics and cellars. Old apartments provide generous closets, which one fills with things that are permanently inaccessible and unneeded. And there is the ultimate catch-all - the bouse in Clutter is a modern phenomenon, born of the Industrial Revolution. There was a time when goods were limited. Objects were precious and bard to come by. Clutter is a 19thcentury aesthetie; it came with the abundance of products combined with the rise of purchasing oower, and the shifts in society that required manifestations of status.

Victorian parlors were jungles of elaborate furnishings and ornamental overkill. The re-forms of the Arts and Crafts movement in the later 19th century only substituted a more "refined" kind of clutter. There were bewildering "artful" effects borrowed from the studio or atelier.

Clutter became a bad word only in the 20th century. The modern movement decreed a new simplicity — white walls, bare floors

I have a feeling that picking up will go on long after ways have been found to circumvent death and taxes.

stant, bornogeneous style, created whole and new. These houses and apartments, always most purified of settings. If ornament was well-published, either start with nothing, which is rare, or clear everything out that the owners have acquired, which must take courage, desperation, or both.

age, desperation, or both.

I confess to very mixed reactions when I see these sleek and shining couples in their sleek and shining rooms, with every perfect thing in its perfect place. Not the least of my feelings is envy. Do these people, elegantly garbed and posed in front of the lacquered built-ins with just the right primitive pot and piece of sculpture and the latest exotic tree, feel a tremendous sense of freedom and release? Have they been liberated by their seamless new look?

More to the point, what have they done

More to the point, what have they done with their household lares and penates, the sentimental possessions of their past? Did they give them away? Send them to auction galleries and thrift shops? Go on a trip while the decorator cleared them all out? Take a deduction for their memories? Were they tempted to keep nothing? Do they ever bave

This, of course, is radical surgery. The rest crime, clutter was taboo.

Architects huilt houses and decorators filled them. Antiques were discovered and every kind of collecting boomed. There were even architects of impeccable modernist credentials -- Charles Eames and Alexander Girard — who acquired and arranged vast numbers of toys and treasures. They did so with a discerning eye for the colorful and the primitive that added interest — and elutter to modern rooms.

Today, clutter is oozing in at a record rate. Architect-collectors like Charles Moore are freewbeeling and quixotic in their tastes; high scriousness has been replaced by eclec-tic whirnsy. Nostalgia and flea markets coexist on a par with scholarship and accredited antiques. Turning the century on its head. the artifacts of early modernism are being collected by the post-modernist avant-garde. Sophisticated merchandising sells the endless new fashions and products embraced by an affluent consumer society. The vacuum must be filled. And the truth must be told. Our British Prime Minster Margaret Thatcher came in second in the "Hate and Fear" category, with former African dictator Idi Amin third and the ayatollah fourth.
